BALTIMORE POLICE OFFICER CLEARED IN FREDDIE GRAY'S DEATH

1 Baltimore police officer Caesar Goodson Jr. was cleared of criminal wrongdoing in the death of Freddie Gray, a black man who died of injuries sustained while in police custody. Baltimore City Circuit Court Judge Barry Williams found Gsoodson, who is also black, not guilty of all criminal counts including second-degree depraved heart murder, the most serious accusation against any of the six officers charged in connection with Gray's death. Prosecutors had failed to secure convictions in two earlier trials of police officers. Goodson, 46, was the driver of a police transport van in which Gray broke his neck in April 2015. Goodson had also faced three counts of manslaughter, and single counts of reckless endangerment, second-degree assault and misconduct in office. REUTERS

TORNADO, HAIL STORMS KILL AT LEAST 78 PEOPLE IN CHINA

2 A tornado, hail storms and driving rain killed at least 78 people and injured some 500 in eastern China on Thursday, flattening power lines, overturning cars and ripping roofs off houses in Jiangsu province. The storm struck midafternoon near Yancheng city, a few hours' drive north of China's commercial capital, Shanghai, the Ministry of Civil Affairs said. Winds of 78 mph battered several townships in Funing county, the official Xinhua news agency said. "I heard the gales and ran upstairs to shut the windows," Funing resident Xie Litian, 62, told Xinhua. "I had hardly reached the top of the stairs when I heard a boom and saw the entire wall with the windows on it torn away." When the storm subsided and Xie escaped, all the neighboring houses were gone. REUTERS

SPLIT SUPREME COURT BLOCKS OBAMA IMMIGRATION PLAN

3 The Supreme Court dealt President Barack Obama a harsh defeat by blocking his plan to spare millions of illegal immigrants from deportation in a split 4-4 ruling he called frustrating to those aiming to fix America's broken immigration system. The ruling, coming seven months before Obama's term in office ends, marked the latest success that his Republican adversaries have had in thwarting a major policy initiative of the Democratic president. It also guarantees that immigration will remain a prominent part of the campaign ahead of the Nov. 8 election in which voters will pick his successor. REUTERS

City won't reject resignations from BLS leaders

Faculty butts heads with mayor, superintendent after Boston Latin School administrators step down.

Boston Latin School NICOLAUS CZARNECKI

City leaders said Thursday they would accept resignations from two top officials at the prestigious Boston Latin School.

Lynne Mooney Teta, BLS headmaster, and Malcolm Flynn, assistant headmaster, this week announced they would step down amid scrutiny of the racial climate at the exam school that has included a student-led social media campaign and city and federal investigations.

Faculty had called on Mayor Marty Walsh and Boston Public Schools Superintendent Tommy Chang not to accept their resignations, but Walsh said in a news conference that his administration was instead looking to the future.

"Our intention is to continue the greatness and excellence that happens at this school," Walsh said. "As I said, even this year — a difficult year for a lot of people — 410 graduates graduated, the largest graduating class in the history of this school. The expectation is to keep up the strong rigor in this school."

At that point, Zita Cousins, a BLS guidance counselor, leaned in to the microphone he was using and announced: "We do not want the headmaster or Mr. Flynn to resign."

Outside the school, faculty made a vocal stand, chanting, "BLS! BLS!"

Boston Globe reporter Meghan Irons tweeted it was a "crazy scene" as BLS faculty were "calling and cheering drowning out Walsh and [Boston Public Schools Superintendent Tommy] Chang."

> "As I said, even this year — a difficult year for a lot of people — 410 graduates graduated, the largest graduating class in the history of this school. The expectation is to keep up the strong rigor in this school."
> Walsh

The spectacle came after a closed-door discussion inside the school that faculty told reporters was heated.

Some parents began circulating the mayor's cellphone number, urging others to pester him with the words: "What's the plan Marty? #WeAreBLS," according to WGBH's Peter Kadzis.

Speaking with reporters Thursday, Flynn reiterated his stance blaming Walsh and Chang for how they responded to the allegations that surfaced this year, according to coverage in The Boston Herald.

Flynn, who has been an educator at the school for five decades, didn't mince words in his resignation letter this week, writing that, "It is my belief that our school and our efforts here have been unfairly judged, for reasons that go well beyond the walls of BLS."

The swirl of controversy around BLS and its leadership started in January, when students Meggie Noel and Kylie Webster-Cazeau with a group called BLS BLACK (Black Leaders Aspiring for Change and Knowledge) posted a video in which they were critical of the way the school has addressed complaints about racially charged incidents involving classmates and teachers.

Much of that criticism continued online, with commentary from those in the school community and outside it surfacing on Twitter via the hashtag #BlackatBLS.

Following Teta's resignation, BLS BLACK wrote in a statement posted to Facebook on Tuesday that the group was "just as shocked as the general public" about the news.

"We want to emphasize that her decision is completely independent of the mission of the #BlackAtBLSmovement which is to increase racial inclusion and race explicit dialogue at Boston Latin School," the statement reads.

An investigation run by the School Department found BLS didn't properly handle one incident, in which a nonblack student threatened a black student and used a racial slur. It was one of seven reported cases the city investigated.

Another investigation led by the office of U.S. Attorney Carmen Ortiz is underway.

Ben Affleck slurs profane Deflategate rant on HBO show

"Deflategate is the ultimate bulls—f—ing outrage of sports."

In Affleck's serene visage lurks the mouth of a sailor. GETTY IMAGES

Ben Affleck certainly let loose on HBO's "Any Given Wednesday" with Bill Simmons on Wednesday night.

In an epic five-minute rant, Affleck, a noted New England Patriots fan, slammed the NFL and its commissioner, Roger Goodell, for quarterback Tom Brady's four-game suspension after using underinflated balls during a playoff game last year.

Dropping the F-bomb 16 times, the actor alleged Brady's punishment was the result of a "conspiracy" of people in the NFL, calling the entire ordeal "f—ing ridiculous smear campaign."

"We haven't done anything to address this crisis of domestic violence in the NFL, but the f—ing football better not be 8 percent lighter," Affleck quipped.

Naturally, there was rampant media speculation that he was drunk. How else could you explain a passionate rant about the most "bulls—f—ing outrage of sports?"

Then again, Affleck was raised right outside Boston, so, uh, this is nothing new.

WAGE THEFT BILL

Wage theft bill backed by Bump, Healey

As workers gathered outside the State House on Thursday to describe personal experiences with wage theft, the state auditor and staff from the attorney general's office joined them to show support for legislation backers say would step up employer accountability and protect worker rights.

Manny Gines of New England Regional Council of Carpenters speaks about sticking up for fair wages and treatment of workers. DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

A bill before the Senate Ways and Means Committee would authorize stop-work orders at businesses that violate wage laws, with worker wages guaranteed for the first 10 days of lost work due to the order. It would also give the attorney general power to file civil actions for injunctive relief on behalf of workers.

According to Community Labor United, a coalition supporting the legislation, a total of $700 million in wages is stolen annually in Massachusetts from about 350,000 workers, and the attorney general is able to recover about $5.2 million. Workers speaking at the coalition's rally said they'd experienced wage thefts in various forms. SHNS

Democrats end House sit-in over gun control

Democrats in the U.S. House of Representatives on Thursday ended a day-long sit-in at the chamber to protest the lack of action on gun-control measures.

Democratic members had taken over the House on Wednesday, sitting on the floor while chanting and singing, and stayed all night to push for gun control legislation after the massacre at a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida, even though Republicans adjourned the House and went home for a holiday break.

Steny Hoyer of Maryland, the No. 2 Democrat in the House, told Reuters that lawmakers would now go back to their districts to build support for legislation.

Dramatic tactics by legislators are rare in the U.S. Capitol, and the protest underscored how sensitive the gun control issue has become after the June 12 massacre in which a U.S.-born gunman pledging allegiance to the Islamic State killed 49 people.

The House Democrats were seeking votes on legislation to expand background checks for gun purchases, as well as measures to curb the sale of weapons to people on government watch lists.

Police shoot dead masked man who took hostages in German cinema

A masked man took hostages at a cinema in western Germany on Thursday before police stormed the complex and shot him dead, police said.

No other people were injured, a police spokesman said.

The attacker, who carried a rifle or "long gun," acted alone and appeared to have been a "disturbed man," Hesse State Interior Minister Peter Beuth told the regional parliament.

Police had not identified the man or established his motive, spokesman Bernd Hochstaedter said, adding that nothing immediately pointed to him having a militant background.

German television showed pictures of heavily armed police, wearing helmets and body armor, storming the Kinopolis complex in Viernheim, south of Frankfurt, and a couple fleeing the building.

Cinema employee Guri Blakaj told Reuters the gunman, who appeared to be between 18 and 25 years old and was about 5-feet-6-inches tall, entered the cinema around 3 p.m. and told workers to get into an office.

He then went into a theater. Blakaj, who said there were about six workers and 30 cinemagoers in the building, then heard shots fired.

Police special forces stormed the building and shot him.

There was still a heavy police presence at the scene into the late afternoon, and a helicopter circled overhead.

TIME TO ROLL UP SOME SLEEVES

THE FOREMAN OPINION

TOM FOREMAN

With spring over and summer steaming down, my wife and I finally took on the dirty work of cleaning the ornamental pond in our backyard, or as I was calling it, "Zika Test Pool No. 1." We shooed away the mosquitoes, bailed out the muck and after a couple of hard hours we were done. We dropped in a hose to refill it, and watched a half dozen goldfish go happily back to swimming. Well, who knows if they are happy? It's hard to tell with fish.

Don't get me wrong. Our pond is no big deal. The whole thing is only about the size of a bathtub. A regular bathtub. Not one of those super-sized Cialis tubs that seem to be in some backyards judging from what I see on TV.

But keeping our little pond clean, healthy and vaguely presentable always requires more work than one might imagine. We have to fertilize the lily, pull weeds and treat it with a chemical that keeps the fish alive. We also have to flush out the filter on the fountain every few days or else it dribbles like a toddler eating soup.

The point is, no matter how much we wish the pond would take care of itself, it won't. We've tried shouting speeches at it. We've waved signs. We've staged a sit-in. We've threatened it with lawsuits. We've even collected signatures on a petition. No dice.

The only way to keep the pond running properly is to routinely engage in tiring, inglorious, messy and grinding labor. This draws no praise from our neighbors. Not one glowing item appears in the media — social or otherwise. Certainly we've never seen a bump in our approval polls.

Anyway, I've been thinking about our annual pond cleaning as politicos, left, right and center, have lately staged newsmaking stunts to show their dedication to one cause or another. And I wish they'd just retreat from the limelight, quietly pull on their work gloves, and actually try to produce real results.

That may not get them headlines or re-elected. But I suspect all of us little fish might enjoy it.

BRIEF

US banks flex capital muscle

Big banks are proving themselves to be stronger and sounder in an annual regulatory stress test, even as the Federal Reserve changes doomsday scenarios to keep them on their toes.

The Fed said each of the 33 U.S. banks that underwent its standardized stress test were able to stay above minimum required capital levels in severe economic and market conditions. Banks that participated last year also passed, but their capital levels have largely improved since then.

Overall, the 33 banks would suffer $385 billion in loan losses over nine quarters under the most severe scenario, the Fed said. In aggregate, a key ratio measuring high-quality capital against risk-weighted assets, known as the Tier 1 common equity ratio, would drop to a low of 8.4 percent. That is well above the 4.5 percent minimum set by regulators.

Since the Fed started stress testing banks in 2009, capital levels have risen and credit quality has improved, with bad loans rolling off the books. The Fed creates new inputs for market and economic chaos each year, and shocked investors in January when it included negative interest rates in the worst-case scenario. REUTERS

Will Smith was still a Fresh Prince 20 years ago. ALL PHOTOS TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

Check out the gizmos

The world finds out about the alien invasion the old fashioned way: by watching television. The few characters who have cellphones are essentially lugging around massive bricks. The baddies are taken down after someone signs into AOL. Goldblum's techie is a genius who can do things like track people's coordinates and upload viruses — acts that are no longer the exclusive domain of nerds.

7 Ways the original 'Independence Day' movie just screams 1996

"Independence Day" turns 20 this year and to celebrate, 20th Century Fox has made a belated sequel that isn't being screened for American critics ahead of its release. So much has changed since then. Here are some ways the original modern super-duper-mega blockbuster makes for a surprising time capsule.

MATT PRIGGE

SUMMER EVENT MOVIES WERE STILL RELATIVELY NEW

The summer movie as a concept dates back to "Jaws," but it didn't really start becoming what it is today — namely, outsized and basically running all year long — until 1996.

"Independence Day" was teased months in advance with freaky Super Bowl spots — a practice that's now common but was new back then. By the time the movie was released — on July Fourth, of course — every man, woman and child felt it was their patriotic duty to spend 2½ hours watching humanity kick squiddy alien behind (wherever that was on their bodies).

WILL SMITH WASN'T YET A MAJOR STAR

The cast of "ID4" was sprawling — so big that everyone had to be "affordable." The heroes were played not by Arnold Schwarzenegger or John Travolta but by Bill Pullman, Jeff Goldblum and, er, Randy Quaid. The closest to a big name was Will Smith, who at that point was simply a rapper-turned-actor with a hit sitcom, one acclaimed supporting turn in a serious drama ("Six Degrees of Separation") and a hit ("Bad Boys") in which he shared the lead with Martin Lawrence. With his good vibes and arsenal of trailer-friendly quips, the Fresh Prince got his John Wayne in "Stagecoach" break: Within his first moments onscreen it was clear he was the movies' newest, biggest thing — big enough that he isn't even in the sequel.

REMEMBER LAWYER JOKES?

The '90s were a time of relentless John Grisham books and their movie adaptations. With them came an even more relentless assault of lawyer jokes, most often flung by Jay Leno. So it doesn't take more than a couple minutes for someone to make a joke about lawyers and how crooked they are, or whatever we hated about them.

GAY PANIC JOKES!

It doesn't take long for the fliers played by Smith and Harry Connick Jr. to do a bit in which the latter gets down on his knee while holding the engagement ring Smith intends to give to his stripper girlfriend (Vivica A. Fox). Would you believe a colleague sees them and gets the wrong impression? These were the jokes, people!

IT BELIEVES IN GLOBAL (AND NATIONAL) UNITY

America does the brunt of the legwork taking out our extraterrestrial overlords — and in only three days! — but the movie is ultimately utopian. Everyone, both here and abroad, comes together for a common cause, and Pullman's prez, in his fiery "St. Crispin's Day"-style speech before the big fight, even says that "Independence Day" is no longer just for America but for all countries. (Surely the Breitbarts would handle that one well if it came out today.) Even scientists and the military work hand-in-hand, with only minimal infighting. Maybe "Independence Day" isn't just a ceaselessly ridiculous behemoth that hypnotized the world into loving it 20 years back. Maybe it really is a lovely fantasy of a paradise that we've since destroyed.

IT WAS A BAD TIME FOR WOMEN — OR, YOU KNOW, MORESO

"ID4" is about military might, and therefore manly might. The men do all the flying and almost all of the decision-making. Yes, some of the female characters have careers, but they mostly stay home as the boys are out fighting. They're even the subject of career-shaming: Margaret Colin plays a White House staffer who ditched one of the heroes — Jeff Goldblum's MIT expert/environmentalist — for her job. She learns the error of her ways, and by the end she's switched out of those evil pantsuits into flannel lifted from Goldbum's wardrobe. Also of note: While Bill Pullman plays an entirely noble version of Bill Clinton, the Hillary stand-in (Mary McDonnell) winds up dying after an attack. So there's that.

No spoilers for Kimiko Glenn

The actress weighs in on the show's shocking fourth season.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

The fourth season of "Orange Is the New Black" dropped on Netflix last Friday, and it wouldn't be totally out of line for us to assume you may have rabidly consumed all 13 episodes. If you have (and are already scouring the web for Season 5 spoilers), read on: We tapped actress Kimiko Glenn who plays tree-hugging incessant babbler Brook Soso to fill us in on her vital role in that shocking finale.

Actually, just kidding! "I don't even want to allude to it!" she says. "No one knew until we read through [the script], and I thought, 'This is not real.'"

One more thing

You're filling the late Adrienne Shelley's iconic role in "Waitress" on Broadway. Is there particular pressure on playing that character, knowing she wrote and directed the film version of the story, too?
It's been a breath of fresh air. I thought about putting a lot of pressure on myself at first, but I also wanted to give it new life because of Adrienne. I think I found something really nice and I hope she's proud. A lot of her family have come [to the show], and said she would have loved what I've done, and that means so much to me. Returning to the stage has been amazing. It feels like home to me.

Brook Soso found love in a hopeless place. JOJO WHILDEN/NETFLIX

But what is real is the life Glenn gives to Soso in Season 4. Since her character's Season 2 introduction, fans had only known her to be the half-Asian hippie who once lived in a condemned tree (and was subsequently arrested) and now lives in Litchfield, where she has yet to find her own group of friends in the racially divided prison.

Following a failed suicide attempt at the end of Season 3, we kick off the fourth with Soso's burgeoning friendship/romance with fellow inmate, Poussey (Samira Wiley). Glenn weighs in on her character's Season 4 arc, sharing scenes with the sensational Wiley and her new role in Broadway's "Waitress."

Warning: This interview includes spoilers from Season 4.

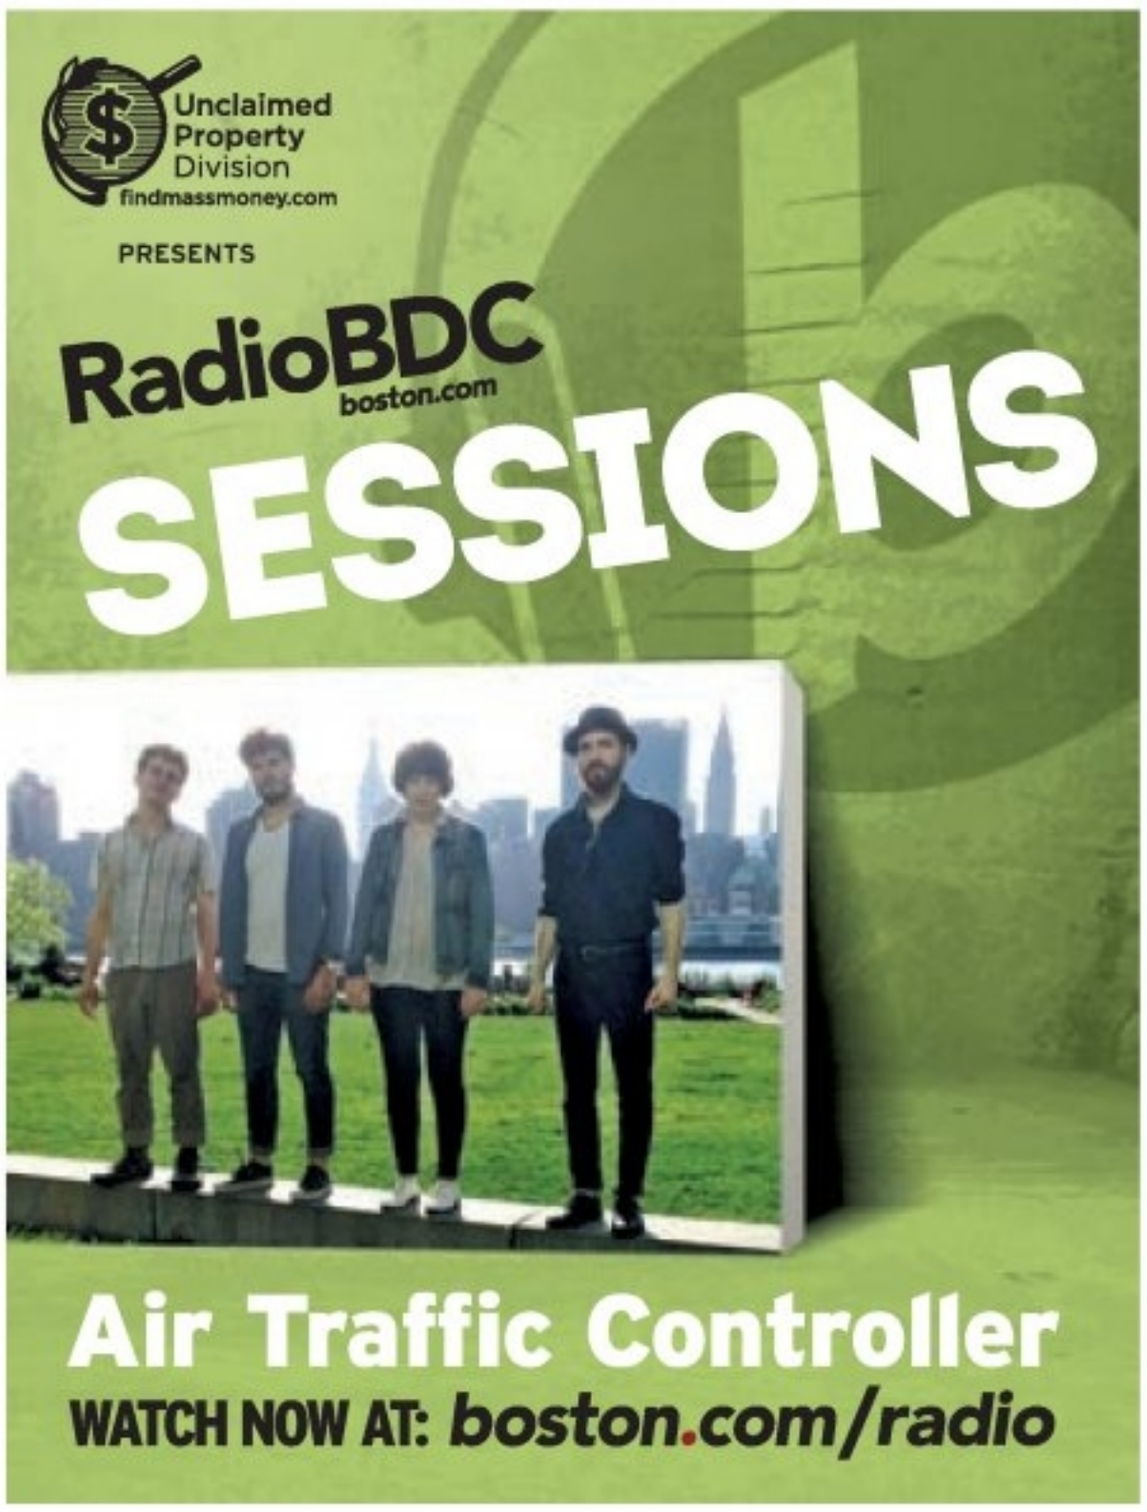
What is it like for you as an actress knowing that the day after your new season drops people could have already binge watched it?
Well, it's crazy because it's been less of an explosion this year than other times. I think because it's on the fourth season, the diehards are still binging but a lot of people are enjoying it one episode at the time. In the past, it's been like a gunshot, where everyone's seen the show the next day and asking about the new season already. It's been slow and steady this time. It's nice.

We finally get a Soso backstory episode this season. Were you excited when you found out?
Any time you get more material for a character it's exciting because it's another clue as to who they are. With television, the possibilities are endless, and then there's the fact that we don't know specifically what she's done [to go to jail] yet, that's exciting, too.

GETTY IMAGES

There's the theme this season of characters discovering their own racist tendencies, and Soso was one of the most surprising when she makes assumptions about Poussey's upbringing.
I was a little bit shocked that she would be as insensitive as she was in that situation. She's so educated and socially conscious about that sort of thing, so I was surprised she let herself blab. But then, no matter who you are, or what education level you've achieved, you might hold some prejudice because of your parents or surroundings as a kid. I was just surprised she would so openly do it.

Let's talk about Poussey and Soso's romance. She finds you at the end of Season 3 after Soso's suicide attempt and you can see the start of a bond.
Honestly, there is no one better to have a scene with or work with or be able to kiss than Samira Wiley. She's so attractive and adorable and fun to play off of. And selfishly, for me, the past two seasons I haven't had a proper scene partner — someone to listen to me and respond and respect what I say as Brook — and that can be a little hard playing. It was a game-changer for me. I felt liberated. My character gets to smile and feel loved, and you didn't get to see that in the past two seasons. You know someone more when you see someone loving them.



"The Shallows"

Director: Jaume Collet-Serra
Stars: Blake Lively, a shark
Rating: PG-13

Blake Lively isn't always this ogled in "The Shallows." VINCE VALITUTTI

Jean-Luc Godard said all a movie needed was a girl and a gun. "The Shallows" goes with a girl and a shark. In fact, that's all it has. It needs nothing else. A tiny, lean, stripped-down tale of survival unleashed into a wasteland overrun with blockbuster giants, it plays David to the many Goliaths, offering a reminder that less is more in an age when more is always mistaken for more. All it does is pit Blake Lively, a surfer in a beauteous and remote Mexican alcove, against a great white that doesn't want her to reach shore. Sometimes it's that simple.

And it's the definition of simple. Once Lively's Nancy has swum out far enough to become potential fish food, she has next to nothing to help her — just a buoy, a set of rocks peeking out above the surf and, as a good sick joke, a chomped-up whale carcass, upon which our bikini-d cover girl has to climb for safety. There's another fine gross-out gag, involving an inventive use of the jewelry she wears even while catching waves. Like its hero, the move is resourceful. Every time the script seems to have written itself into a wall, it finds another out, making lots out of nothing at all.

Director Jaume Collet-Serra is Hollywood's last trashy genre filmmaker standing. In the likes of "Non-Stop" and "Run All Night" — both of which paired him with Liam Neeson — the director delivered the kind of whip-smart time-killer studios used to churn out at a steady clip. His star is comfortable and good-humored even when things get hairy, and Collet-Serra rewards her by having his camera only ogle her minimally. This isn't always a smart movie, but it's smart moviemaking, knowing its limitations as well as its increasingly rarified strengths. MATT PRIGGE

"Free State of Jones" is the kind of movie they just don't make anymore. But sometimes that's a good thing. Many a genre has fallen by the wayside as blockbusters have taken over the multiplex. One is the stiff historical saga, where filmmakers burn epic running times fudging the truth in the name of edutainment. Thing is, "Free State of Jones" actually does boast a fascinating and not terribly well-known true tale.

Matthew McConaughey's Newton Knight is a hotheaded good ol' boy who, toward the end of the Civil War, helped lead his fellow Mississippians in a rebellion against the Confederacy. They were a band where white and black and even womenfolk were seen as equal. Initially consisting of runaway slaves and war deserters, they swelled in numbers as they took on the evil empire, only to watch as their utopia crumbled during Reconstruction and the rise of corrupt bureaucracies and white-on-black violence.

This is a lot to cover, even over 139 minutes, and "Jones" can't help but feel like a Netflix miniseries hacked into a shapeless blob. Individual scenes and performances stick out, and it's clear writer-director Gary Ross was very sincere about not making this just another reductive prestige picture. But it becomes an impossible movie Ross just couldn't crack. MP

One shouldn't assume models have little on their minds, and the same goes for Nicolas Winding Refn's "The Neon Demon." Like "Drive" and "Bronson," this fashion world takedown is a crazy/beautiful burlesque of anguish and ultraviolence, soaked in loud colors and a louder electro-score. You could say Refn is a director of style, not ideas. But his style needs to run on ideas — big, provocative, silly ones to match his big, provocative, silly style.

And so we take a Dante-esque trip into the inferno of modeling — a world of interchangeable blond stick figures complicit in their own oppression. Elle Fanning plays Jesse, a new fish who rankles the longtime pros by quickly becoming the next big thing.

The models are all of them victims, but they're also oppressors. Do they turn on the industry that treats them like priced flesh? No, they turn on each other. It's a stretch to say "The Neon Demon" works as social commentary, but at heart it's a funhouse mirror reflection of our tendency to prolong broken, corrupt systems by attacking players, not the game.

But again, that's ascribing too much thought to a film where one character bangs a corpse. Still, Refn has a strong foundation to mostly justify his considerable excesses and to make it deeper than even Refn may realize. MP

Celtics stand pat at No. 3, select Brown

Danny Ainge tabbed the Cal swingman despite attempting monster trades for the No. 3 pick.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

The Celtics stunned by not making a stunning move at the top of the draft Thursday, keeping their pick and selecting Cal swingman Jaylen Brown, a small forward out of California.

If Brown pans out, he could be a Paul Pierce-like force in Boston, given his scoring ability. Brown, who Metro had going to the Celtics at No. 3 in mock drafts for the past four months, was the Pac-12 Freshman of the Year at Cal, averaging 14.6 points, 5.4 rebounds and 2.0 assists per game. He is a prototype NBA small forward, sizewise, already. The 19-year-old is 6-foot-7 and weighs 223 pounds.

"[Danny] Ainge loves Jaylen Brown," ESPN's Jeff Goodman tweeted Thursday night. "[He's] a big, strong, athletic and versatile forward. Not a great shooter, but that's the area he feels he can improve most. Ainge also loved the fact that he worked out against anyone and everyone — unlike all the other top guys."

Ainge gave Brown high praise prior to the draft.

"It was an excellent workout [he had with us]," the typically reserved Ainge told MassLive.com.

Despite Ainge's infatuation with Brown, the Celtics' boss was furiously attempting to trade the No. 3 pick prior to the selection, according to multiple reports.

"Ainge tried — and wanted to make a deal," Goodman said. "But he'll be happy with Brown, who can also play right away. [He's] a physical specimen."

In the minutes before the Celtics made their pick, the Boston Herald's Steve Bulpett tweeted: "GM just texts to say Ainge has been playing hardball all day, adds, 'By this point, he'd better walk away with something.'"

There were rumors all day that the Celtics were going to going to trade the No. 3 pick to either Philadelphia or Chicago. ESPN's Marc Stein tweeted at the start of the draft that the 76ers were offering Nerlens Noel, the No. 24 pick and the No. 26 pick and Robert Covington in exchange for the No. 3 pick. The name Jimmy Butler, the Bulls 2-guard, was again was floated in the minutes before the draft. Given that Chicago traded away point guard Derrick Rose a day prior, it was believed that the Bulls were ready to go into full rebuild-mode.

As expected, LSU's Ben Simmons went to the 76ers at No. 1 and Duke's Brandon Ingram went to the Lakers at No. 2.

"I'm glad I ended up where I am," Brown told ESPN.
